3. COURSE CONTENT.

The course will provide three 5-hour modules concerning the communicative needs of PhD students who wish to participate at conferences. The modules will be delivered online in a synchronous mode with asynchronous components. The modules concentrate on skills necessary for:

- writing abstracts;
- analyzing the language of academic writing
- participating in a discussion;
- presenting and interacting at conferences

4. LEARNING OUTCOMES.

By the end of the course participants will have mastered:

- the ability to write abstracts following discipline specific conventions;
- the ability to lead and contribute effectively to a discussion on an academic topic;
- the ability to give effective presentations in different formats and to interact with other participants in conferences

5. OBJECTIVES.

To provide knowledge and practice in the following fields/areas:

- the functions, types and structure of abstracts;
- linguistic and rhetorical patterns in abstracts;
- agreeing on the topic of a team conference presentation;
- selecting the content for the presentation from a variety of sources;
- discussing the structure, length, visual aids, etc.;
- dividing work, responsibilities and setting deadlines;
- preparing an oral meeting report;
- leading and participating in an academic meeting;
- presenting the synopsis of a paper or a research project orally in an academic setting;
- selecting content and commenting a slide-show or any other visual support (pace, timing);
- the do's and don'ts of visual efficiency in a variety of academic settings that imply oral skills;
- leading exchanges after a presentation and interacting with participants.
